AN ACT relating to peace officers; revising the circumstances under which a law enforcement agency is prohibited from suspending a peace officer without pay during an investigation; authorizing a representative of a peace officer to attend an interview with the peace officer under certain circumstances; requiring a law enforcement agency to revise a peace officer's work schedule for attending certain hearings and administrative proceedings; prohibiting the use in a criminal proceeding of a statement or answer of a peace officer obtained during an investigation under certain circumstances; and providing other matters properly relating thereto.

Legislative Counsel's Digest:

Existing law authorizes a law enforcement agency to conduct an investigation of a peace officer in response to a complaint or allegation that the peace officer has engaged in activities which may result in punitive action. Existing law prohibits the law enforcement agency from suspending the peace officer without pay during the investigation until all investigations relating to the matter have concluded. (NRS 289.057) Section 1 of this bill prohibits the law enforcement agency from suspending the peace officer without pay except as otherwise provided in a collective bargaining agreement.

Existing law requires a law enforcement agency to notify a peace officer not later than 48 hours before conducting any interrogation or hearing relating to an investigation of the peace officer. (NRS 289.060) Section 1.5 of this bill imposes additional requirements by requiring the law enforcement agency to provide a written notice to any other peace officer the law enforcement agency believes has any knowledge of any fact relating to the complaint or allegation against the peace officer who is the subject of the investigation. The written notice must advise the peace officer that he or she must appear and be interviewed as a witness in connection with the investigation. Section 1.5 also limits the use of certain evidence discovered during the course of an investigation or hearing and prohibits the use of certain statements or answers made by a peace officer in any subsequent criminal proceeding.

Finally, existing law provides that, if a peace officer is the subject of an investigation of alleged misconduct, a law enforcement agency must interrogate the peace officer during his or her regular working hours, if practical, or compensate the peace officer for his or her time based on the peace officer's wages, if no charges arise from the interrogation. (NRS 289.060) Section 1.5 of this bill deletes the requirement for the payment of compensation to the peace officer and instead requires the law enforcement agency to revise the peace officer's work schedule to allow any time that is required for the interrogation to be deemed a part of the peace officer's regular working hours. If the law enforcement agency does not interrogate the peace officer during his or her regular working hours and the peace officer receives a notice to appear for an interrogation at a time that he or she is off duty, section 1.5 requires the peace officer to be compensated for appearing at the interrogation based on his or her wages and any other benefits he or she is entitled to receive.
